Alcohol & breast cancer

• 8% of global breast cancer disease burden is alcohol-attributable.

• The research is clear and extensive:
  – More than 100 studies show alcohol is a causal contributor to female breast cancer
  – Risk starts increasing at as low as one drink per day.
  – International Agency of Research on Cancer classified alcohol as a carcinogen (Group 1, Cancerous to Humans) for multiple cancers in 1988, and added breast cancer in 2007.

• From a recent study in the US:
  – The majority (56-66%) of alcohol-attributable female cancer deaths were from breast cancer
  – 15% of breast cancer deaths among women were attributable to alcohol

good on so many levels

recent comments

"I went to pick up some of the Mike's Hard Berry, was I was told it was temporarily replaced for Pink Lemonade, due to Breast Cancer Awareness. I bought it to try. It was really good! I noticed the proceeds were also going to Breast Cancer Awareness Research, so I went out and bought a whole case."

"Even after the Breast cancer awarness is over for your pink lemonade You guys should really really keep making the stuff!!!!! It is really good!!!!!! My husband and I have enjoyed it over a good game of pool or just sitting at the kitchen table and visiting."

Breast Cancer Awareness Month (BCAM)

October 1985: Pharmaceutical company Zeneca launched BCAM

Late 1985: Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Research Foundation, Self Magazine, Estee Lauder, and Avon all launched and promoted ribbons for breast cancer awareness

Early 1990s...Estee Lauder distributed millions of pink ribbons at cosmetic counters

...to 2015: hundreds of other companies put pink ribbons on products including clothes, food, cosmetics and beauty products, appliances, cars, foods, beverages...
Pinkwashing

Companies using the breast cancer awareness pink ribbon, or the support of breast cancer charities, as a cause marketing technique to promote specific products, while at the same time manufacturing/selling products that contain ingredients that are linked to the disease.
Methodology

• Reviewed various types of promotional materials:
  – official product websites, press releases, and posts to social media platforms (e.g. Facebook, Twitter, Pinterest)
  – news stories and blog posts from alcohol industry, breast cancer charities, and social media users

• Analyzed using criteria based on Breast Cancer Action questions
  – Names of the breast cancer charities that would receive funding
  – Total amount donated to the designated organization
  – Breast cancer charity activities funded with the donation
  – Caps or limits set for amount of donation to the charity, along with timelines for donations
  – Whether the product exposes the user to carcinogens linked to breast cancer

Contradictions & Dangers

• Of the specific donation amounts listed, most were less than $25,000
  – To compare: the U.S. National Cancer Institute funded $559.2 million in breast cancer research in FY2013

• Extends the potential to increase sales of a carcinogen and enhances marketing opportunities by linking alcohol brand to charity networks, volunteers, and adherents

• Extends marketing reach of pinkwashed alcohol to young women, many of whom may already drink at risky levels

• Devalues prevention messages about drinking and cancer risk by linking the volume purchased (likely consumed) with donation amount

• Undermines efforts by charities that do not engage in corporate relationships with the alcohol industry.

Future research directions

- Alcohol cause marketing with other types of cancer
- Confirm if BC charities receive donations promised in campaigns
- Alcohol sponsorship of BC/other cancer fundraising events
- BC fundraising activities that are drinking events
- Breast cancer charity policies re: acceptance of, agreements with alcohol industry
- Total amounts spent by alcohol industry on pinkwashing and net profit from those campaigns
- Comparison of costs of alcohol-related breast cancer to profits gained from pinkwashed alcohol
- Other alcohol industry cause marketing using types of alcohol-related harm: HIV/AIDS, LGBT equality, returning military veterans, disaster response...
Recommendations

Alcohol producers, wholesalers, retailers, and marketers/advertisers

• Refrain from producing and selling pinkwashed products and campaigns.
• Include restrictions on pink ribbon campaigns in voluntary industry advertising guidelines.

Local, state, and federal regulators

• Refrain from supporting and partnering with the alcohol industry on breast cancer campaigns.
• Where applicable, restrict pinkwashed products and campaigns.
Recommendations

Breast cancer research, treatment, and/or prevention charity leaders

• Refuse marketing and sponsorship arrangements that promote alcohol products and/or consumption.

• Adopt clear policies regarding how, if at all, the charity will engage with the alcohol industry.

• Join with public health and policy advocates to clearly separate alcohol marketing from cancer.
